The truth is out about the Automated Counting Machines

They should be put to use in the 2007 elections

Recent events have cleared up disputed facts about the purchase of automated counting machines by the Commission on Elections in (when):

1. The Department of Science and Technology (DOST) had certified the Automated Counting Machines (ACMs) as 100 percent accurate—prior to the contract award.

■ Not one but two intensive DOST tests on the automated counting machines (ACMs) yielded 100 percent accuracy ratings for all three environmental conditions—cold, normal and harsh.

The test results formed the initial DOST Report of 14 April 2003. Subsequently, on 31 October 2003, Executive Director Rolando Viloria of the DOST-Metals Industry Research and Development Center and concurrent Chairman of the DOST Technical Evaluation Committee, wrote:

> "Certainly, the verification test would show that the machine is 100% accurate in reading and counting the votes that are properly shaded, provided that the ballots are fed with the right orientation. Hence, we can safely conclude that the machine has a 100% accuracy rating on all environmental conditions."

The DOST reaffirmed this finding during hearings to clear up the question that were conducted by the Office of the Ombudsman.

2. There was NO OVERPRICING of the ACMs.

■ Allegations of overpricing are baseless—considering that industry experts themselves had determined the cost parameters after a series of consultations with the stakeholders. In fact NAMFREL, the quick-count civic organization, agreed that the price estimate the experts arrived at was reasonable.

■ Claims of overpricing of the ACMs by the Administration's political opponents—who resist its effort to speed up and keep inviolate the canvassing of the vote—focused narrowly on the cost of the ACM machines (the hardware) but neglected to account for the cost of the counting, canvassing and consolidation software, which are proprietary and developed at great cost by their copyright holders.

3. It was private-sector experts from the information technology industry who determined principally the agency budget estimate for the purchase of the automated counting machines.

■ It has become clear that private-sector experts were the driving force in setting the budget estimate for the purchase of the ACMs. The participation of the Commission on Elections was limited to initiating consultations with some of the most eminent experts and leading lights of the Philippine information technology industry. The price estimate that the Comelec adopted eventually was the recommendation of these experts from the information technology sector.

■ The private-sector experts determined the budget ceiling of P880 million for hardware and P420 million for software and related services for a grand total of P1.3 billion. This decision was reached at the 18th meeting, in April 2002, of the COMELEC and the Private Sector Technical Procurement Planning and Investment Analysis Committee for the Automation of the May 10, 2004 Presidential and Local Elections.

4. The opposition to the use of the ACMs in the 2007 elections is based on an argument that is unclear and suspect.

■ In the proceedings before the Ombudsman, the complainants failed consistently to appear. In fact, they attended only one of several hearings called by the Office of the Ombudsman.

■ On 30 June 2006, the Office of the Ombudsman released its initial report on its investigation into the ACM procurement contract. Between June 20 and August 16, complainant Kilosbayan—despite receiving due notice of every hearing—appeared only once. Complainant Senator Aquilino Pimentel did not at all appear— except at the first hearing, through his counsel.

■ The Office of the Ombudsman recently noted that the complainants—whose unsubstantiated allegations had set off the investigation—"have been publicly airing their concerns about the voided COMELEC and Mega Pacific Contract; yet they refuse to make the same under oath."

Against all the tenets of justice and fair play, the complainants have chosen to bring their case to the media—ignoring the rule of law, which requires them to substantiate their claims by competent evidence—or failing that—to keep their mouths shut!

Now that the truth is out, we demand:

— That the cases before the Ombudsman be resolved with dispatch.

— That the ACMs be used in the 2007 elections to save the nation billions of taxpayer's money: any new appropriation by Congress will be a waste of public funds.

Carmencita Lozada remembered; Lea Salonga awarded

By Pablo A. Tariman
Contributor

VIOLINIST CARMENCITA Lozada, the first and the last Filipino prize-winner of the Paganini Competition in Italy, passed away last week (Aug. 15) due to lung cancer.

The last time she was seen by Manila's music lovers was in March last year when the National Commission for Culture and the Arts launched her collection of CDs which documented her landmark performances in Manila and Europe.

A violin prodigy from Pasig City, Lozada debuted with an orchestra at age 10 and then became soloist of the Philippine Youth Orchestra under the baton of her mentor, Maestro Luis Valencia.

In 1954, she won a national competition in Manila for playing the Tchaikovsky concerto.

In 1958 and 1961, she won in the Paganini Competition in Italy. She performed concerts in Europe, US and Canada, and was probably the only Filipino violinist to have made a radio recording in Germany (Cologne, Hamburg, Hannover, Baden-Baden), Holland, Vienna and Poland.

Lozada gave violin classes and workshops at the Cultural Center of the Philippines and National Arts Center, and premiered the violin concertos of Lucrecia Kasilag (Violin Concerto No. 1), Alfredo Buenaventura (Violin Concerto in E Minor), Lucino Sacramento, Mikhail Tanyushin (premiered in Moscow in
